WHAT IS ACH?

Automated Clearing House (ACH) is an electronic digital network for financial transactions in the United States. ACH processes large volumes of credit and debit transactions in batches. Debit transfers also include new applications such as the point-of-purchase (POP) check conversion (ARC) and more, (see ACH transaction types) NACHA. Both the government and the commercial sectors use ACH payments. Businesses increasingly use ACH online to have customers pay, rather than via credit or debit cards. ACH is a computer-based clearing and settlement facility established to process the exchange of electronic transactions between participating depository institutions. Account-to-account (A2A) transfers that utilize a system connected to every transaction participant through all U.S.-based financial institutions.
